Mimmo Rubino, known as Rub Kandy is an Italian artist from Rome, who expresses his engaged views in multiple media. He creates regarding the immediate surroundings as a backdrop, intervening in the public space, exploring the possibilities of balance of tangible and visible aspects of human identity. Rubino's works is cut and curated precisely, to the final layer of meaning, as it deconstructs the expected visuals of urban setting, it also makes a piercing social commentary. Making the crossing in between different media as natural as it could possible appear; Rub Kandy also removes the threshold keeping the doors between what is conventionally seen as street art and more traditional contemporary art practice, usually bound to an exhibiting space.

"Each artist has a certain agenda, a way through which his or her work can be translated into something meaningful and thought-provoking. in regards to mimmo rubino, this has meant researching the boundaries of visual identity and ways to live and build art. the quest has led to the development of a project titled 'Standard & Poor's (Italia Mobile)'. The experimental project combines the mediums of spray paint and photography. 'as usual I have no clear results. just some pictures to show what I'm doing in this 'middle land', mixing up paint, photography and friends,' says Rubino. three caravans have been painted to replicate the color scheme of the country's flag. the added hues bring life to the site, intervening to contrast the surrounding remnants and unwanted goods."

Rub Kandy is melting the distinction between the street and the gallery further with a new installation in Lichtenberg, a neighborhood in Berlin.

Incorporating imagery evoking Berlin's not so distant past and its administration under Soviet authority, Rub Kandy is placing powerful memory-jolting symbols unusually in public space, and letting the associations be determined without providing context.

Rub Kandy used the space as an experimentation platform and a base for interventions in the close Lichtenberg environment.

As guided by the frame projects, the artist achieved the final expression of his individual vision related to the question of personal and environmental identity, specifically addressing the issues of urban outskirts. By living and creating within the gallery space, the artist changes the interior as well as the exterior of the residential area.

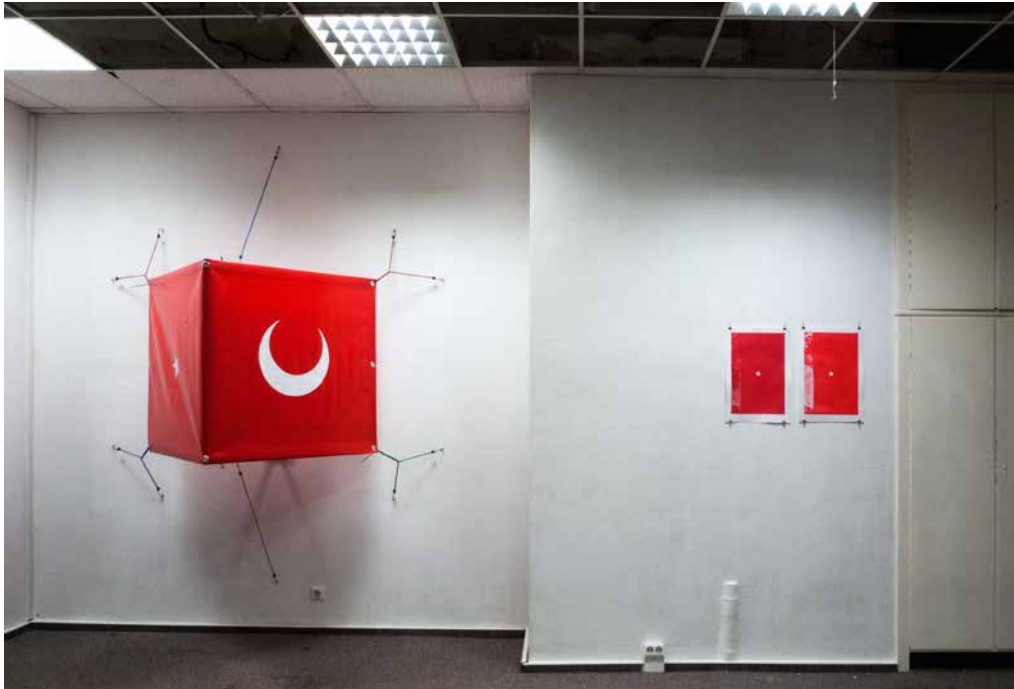

In these works, the artist questions the set values of urban identity in a series of installations and urban art installments, actively changing the urban portrait of the neighborhood. [widewalls.ch]

Rub Kandy's latest work in Rome was made with Angelo Sabatiello and Francesca Tricca during a workshop with kids in Corviale neighborhood, an impressive 1-km building in the south-west of the city, made in the '70 to store more than 5000 people. During the workshop Kandy taught the kids to steal slogans from the IKEA catalogue and paste them up on the walls of the neighborhood.

Atlantica: Bubble Gum, Uncle Sam, Atlantica 3 USA flags

Paint, photography
Atlantic City, NJ, USA, 2013

Italian Artist Mimmo Rubino aka Rub Kandy never fails to miss an opportunity to transform objects & places into his canvas, be it a cement truck or steps of an amphitheatre. His most recent projects titled 'Atlantica' is yet another feather in his cap.

The steps of an amphitheatre in Atlantic city have been painted in different colour combinations representing three different flags inspired by American culture.

While the 'Uncle Sam' flag colour palette is directly inspired by the United States flag, the 'Bubble Gum' flag colours are inspired by the American pop scene and sugar food culture (ice-creams & candies). The 'Atlantica' flag colours are the colours of the Atlantic ocean, the blue and the turquoise of the sea and the yellow of the sun.

A three dimensional effect is achieved on the basis of the vertical lines chosen by the artist arbitrarily and the horizontal lines which already exist in the layout of the architecture. The three flags can be viewed together from the centre of the amphitheatre and the stage.

Mimmo Rubino took lots of pictures of the finished artwork that seemed to have transformed into a tourist attraction. Rubino recollects the moments when he felt that all the people had come to show their colours to him, a pop-anthropological immersion in wonderful America.

Rub Kandy transforms the streets and walls of Rome's dilapidated slums and urbana into snatches of perspective-dependent monochrome. Interested in more than simple artistic exercises, Kandy documents the human interaction that accompanies his work. A group of neighborhood children are greeted by a white two-dimensional house.

Spiral is an environmental urban project, created in an abandoned place; the artist has created a geometric shape by exploiting the potential and the movement of the space and using the materials found on the spot.

Using the principals of anamorphosis, a monument to venezuelan politician and emancipator simon bolivar is given a reframed approach. Mimmo Rubino uses the vocabulary of space to address the social by filling the voids of a stair to resemble pyramidal form, a traditional symbol of power and marker of conquest-tinged victory. the steps are rendered unusable and need be traversed in a way that ruptures the-original circulation of the space.

While the work was presented as part of the biennial del sur in panama, the intervention feels like an unsanctioned reclamation of public space, a fitting tribute a sculptural glorification of the revolutionary liberator of latin america from imperial spain, a man that later declared himself a dictator: the dichotomy of the independence leader-turned-despot is reflected in the unabashed occupation of the plaza.

Rome, Italy, 2012

The project by the Italian artist Mimmo Rubino (aka Rub Kandy), Revolver is absolutely no reference to weapons. Using the surface of a rotating cement truck as his canvas, Rub Kandy stood up on a ladder to spray-paint an array of colorful rows along the cylinder.

As the container spun around on its axis, the artist displayed his great eye for symmetry by producing perfectly straight lines without using any guides.

Rome, Italy, 2010

Italian artist Rub Kandy has been boggling our minds lately with his outdoor Anamorphosis series. Armed only with buckets of white paint and a skewed perspective, Rub Kandy creates some really interesting and visually jarring site specific work that redefines the viewer's depth of field and create tangible blocks out of 3D space.

In my anamorphosis works I always try to put 'the illusion' (the anamorphosis is a paradigm of illusion) next to a wrong element that unmasks 'the illusion', in order to reveal 'the real'. I try to find a bug, to generate a short-circuit. I started doing this series of photos by chance, working on an lp cover. I don't want my works to be a showcase of virtuosity. The simpler, the better. My hand is not firm, my paint is not fine, my line is not thorough. With my rough style I try to use perspective destroying perspective. I just want to communicate my religious wonder about the mystery of space and perception.

In Largo Preneste you'll find this wall covered with plaques all exclaiming "per grazia ricevuta", which I believe translates loosely into "by god's grace."

There is an altar to the Virgin Mary as well, like the ones I've written about before, so I suppose in this case, thanks is being given to the Virgin Mary. Also shortened at PGR, there is a tradition to place silver or gold offerings, or plaques such as these, to give thanks for a miraculous happening. When I first started looking at the wall I thought they were memorials for people's deaths, but now I think they are actually giving thanks for the birth's of children. Anyone know?

If you look closely at this photo, you may find a plaque that does not belong... it's actually a very subtle piece of street art by Rub.

RATZINGER are what the big metal letters left all over Rome say. The title of the project is Anonymous Letter to Ratzinger. Whether they have an axe to grind with the Pope over there in the Vatican City seems unclear as the meaning and makers are unknown. Seems to be just one of those things that just IS. Though presumably this isn't fan mail, because with the spotty track record of this Pope, that would be even stranger...

What is to be done with the millions of facts that bear witness that men, consciously, that is fully understanding their real interests, have left them in the background and have rushed headlong on another path, to meet peril and danger; compelled to this course by nobody and by nothing, but, as it were, simply disliking the beaten track, and have obstinately, wilfully, struck out another difficult, absurd way, seeking it almost in the darkness.

Arcade videogame born in the '70, the "Snake" has lived a second glorious youth in the 2000, thanks to his introduction inside of Nokia phones. His radical graphic was perfectly suitable for the small and monochromatic screen of old portable phones. So, inside our pockets, hidden inside the phone interface, we brought an electronic myth. Fielded into the green, a low-fi Snake is doomed to an endless motion: the more he eats the more he grows, until the inescapable death, entrapped inside an incumbent past.

Audio-interview with Ilaria Cucchi a year after Stefano Cucchi's death.
Video 640x480 pixel, 12':10"
Rome, Italy, 2010

October 22nd 2009: Stefano Cucchi dies. 7 days earlier he had been arrested for drug possession.

Up to the time of arrest Stefano is in good health conditions, but at the trial his face shows clear signs of violence. Later he is moved from jail to the prison hospital.

In all likelihood his death is the consequence of the acts of violence he suffered during the arrest, these acts were committed by the people who should have taken care of and healed him: Government, police, doctors. Stefano's family decide to publish pictures of the corpse and those photos end on the cover of newspapers and magazines. They prove what happened. On October 21st, a year after Stefano's death, I interviewed his sister, Ilaria, asking her to talk about those photos.

The images were taken on last June 9, the last day of school. On that day the park (under my balcony) has become a battlefield of the children of different ages playing in water. The title "9 June Park" contains, by association, a tribute to "Nam June Paik", an artist who has explored the potential of video systems.

The term "Refresh" has a double meaning: 1 - Normally used to indicate a moment of regeneration, relax, drink; 2 - In computer and video systems the RAM is the cyclic rewriting data in the memory in order to avoid their loss and damages.

Is that a Anteo tyrannicides the pawn of a bigger game with him or accidental victim of violence in the place?
